If Arizona does not want statehood and should so decide at the election in December, her population will diminish and her property values depreciate just as they did in New Mexico after the defeat of her constitution. In the latter Territory everyone now clamors for statehood. Those who opposed it two years ago have seen the practical effect of their error and acknowledge it.

ARIZONA CATTLE.

The Census Department Makes a Report on this Industry.

Live Stock on Ranges is the title of a report just issued from the census department, in which the district of Arizona is treated as follows:

"Schedule returns were received from 987 herds. The character of the country is mountainous, generally with broad, sandy and barren plains, having limited supplies of forage and water. The winters are not so severe. Arizona is classed as an arid region. Although subjected in mid-summer to heavy rains and great floods, the rainfall is not sufficiently distributed throughout the year to prevent long periods of drouth. The ranges are not as a rule overcrowded, and wool growers have not as yet occupied extensive ranges, except in Apache and Yavapai counties. The range stock of Arizona is reported as follows: Cattle 659,758; horses 18,557; mules and burros 1,203; sheep 412,709; swine 3,013. Mature stock in the extreme western counties, aside from home consumption, finds a market in the Pacific coast towns, while from the northern and eastern counties, where large herds are located, the market is in the distant eastern cities. The great distance from market and long continued hostilities of the Indians have greatly retarded the development of Arizona's live stock probabilities. As a range section it is less densely stocked than any other grazing region in the United States. While of late years the range cattle and horse industries have been depressed, the sheep industry is reported as in good condition."

What the Black Water is.
Capt. Polhamus sent a bottle of the Colorado "black water" to the state mineralogist of California and received the following reply:

Dear Sir—An analysis of the water shows that the black residue is clay containing sand, which on exposure to the air, resumes its normal color, a light brown. The black color is due to organic gases which are carburetted hydrogen and which escape when exposed to the air. A sample of the residue burned forms terra cotta.

Very truly yours,
WM. IRELAND, JR.

A Bed of Thorns.

John Doe, a miner, was found asleep on Allen street, last Friday night, and was taken in by Ben Hyde. He deposited $25 cash for his appearance the next morning. He came up smiling at 9 o'clock and at his request was given till 7 o'clock in the evening to gather his testimony. He was elegantly boozed when that hour arrived, and after the testimony was all in he called for a jury trial. His honor, Justice Johnston, lectured him on the serious results which might follow such trifling with his court, and fined him $20, which left him a credit balance of $5. The latter amount he took out on the Justice in language more forcible than elegant, and was taken back to the tank to cool off and prepare himself for the sabbath and repentance.

GOOD BYE.

A Flattering Testimonial to Dr. Goodfellow by his Friends.

Mining Exchange hall was the scene of a gathering last night which was cosmopolitan in its character and sincere in its expressions for the future of Dr. Goodfellow, who has taken his departure from the scenes of the ten years of his life just past. The ladies of Tombstone were there and the men were there. In fact, Tombstone was there, and each individual shook the doctor by the hand and wished him all manner of prosperity. The hall had been decorated during the day and presented a brilliant appearance. People came and went till half past nine.

The affair was an impromptu one, as but three hours notice had been given of the intended reception, and the result must have been more than gratifying to the man thus honored.

A number of the Doctor's friends tendered him a banquet at the Can Can later in the evening. Between thirty and forty guests sat down to one of those sumptuous repasts for which that house is famed. The toasts were appropriately handled by the Doctor's best man, Marcus A. Smith, who assigned them, flanked by a few suitable words, to each participant, who in turn responded in a like manner.

Mr. Smith in offering the toast "Our Guest" paid a high tribute to the worth of Dr. Goodfellow as a master of his profession and a citizen. The response by the Doctor was full of feeling. He expressed regrets at leaving a community in which he had spent the best ten years of his life, and promised that it would not be forever. Amid the noise of the popping of corks, the laughter at bright witticisms, or applause at more serious responses, good cheer ran into the early morning hours.

The following is a mention of the toasts and those who responded:

Before breaking up, Mr. Smith, on behalf of those present, presented a few appropriate words of farewell to the honored guest, which was responded to by that gentleman, who took the occasion to introduce Dr. Hamilton. The latter paid a high tribute to Tombstone and her hospitality, and promised to do all in his power to earn a warm place in the hearts of the people as had Dr. Goodfellow.

CLIMBING RABBITS.

Strange Transformation Resulting from Changed Conditions of Life.

The effect upon animals of a change in the conditions of their life is a favorite topic among zoologists and biologists, who find that nearly every species of animal existed in some other than its present form, at some previous epoch of the world. The whale, for instance, was once a land animal. Forced to take to the water for a living, he became, in time, much more like a fish in shape than like a land animal.

According to a Tasmanian paper, the Hobart Mercury, a modification of the form of a familiar European animal is going on in the Australian world under the eyes of the people there.

The Australian rabbit, imported from England, is acquiring nails on his feet and learning to climb. As is well known, the rabbits of Australia have increased to such enormous numbers that they have become a great pest, swarming over the land and devouring the farmers' crops.

In order to protect their fields, the farmers put up wire nettings in place of fences. The rabbits could not get through these, but they presently began to burrow beneath them.

Then the farmers sank the nettings six or eight inches into the soil. This stopped the rabbits from getting in by digging, but they presently began to attempt to get over the netting.

As the result of the climbing, it is said, the rabbits are developing a nail in their toes. The nail development has been noticed in Queensland and still later in Tasmania.

According to the theory of natural selection, it is likely presently to happen that in certain districts only those rabbits will survive which can climb at least a little; and in this way a race of climbing rabbits may be developed.

INNOCENT CHILD.

She Was in a Summer Hotel and So Justified Her Mother's Claim.

They were sitting on the porch after breakfast, and the local pastor was speaking of the great need of two new plates for the collection. The cost would not be over five dollars. The girl with the pink silk skirt, who couldn't make up her mind whether to give the bureau cover she was working to Harry or Wood, thought she would compromise and offered to raffle it for the church, says the New York Evening Sun.

"Good!" said the married lady with the blue skirt. "That will be fifty chances at ten cents a chance."

This made the lady with the pink skirt look sleepy, for she had expected the proceeds to be sufficient for not only the plates, but new pews, a steeple with a clock and a set of chimneys.

Then all the people in the hotel gathered together, and the man from Sandusky who had never seen the water loaned his yachting cap. The hotel was of the class where there is a great deal of time, but not much hilarity or food. So to make it last long they decided to put fifty tickets in the hat and the last one drawn was to get the bureau cover. And then the question arose as to who should draw them.

The funny man said, without any hesitation: "An innocent child."

And then all the mothers of children looked around for their last born.

The lady with the blue skirt spied hers first and said: "Come, little golden-haired Frances, none can be more innocent than you. Come and draw fifty tickets out of this hat, slowly and one at a time."

"Say, ma," said golden-haired Frances, "you make me drowsy. Do you think I've got a glass arm?"
